About the FDP

"Information is the oil of the 21st century, and analytics is the combustion engine." Peter Sondergaard, Senior Vice President and Global Head of Research at Gartner, Inc.

Research is an integral part of academics and it is essential to have a thorough knowledge of research for the faculty members involved in teaching and learning in higher educational institutions. The understanding of doing research and analysis has become an important part of everyday life and emerged as a critical component of modern business, operations, media, law, IT, and Management. One of the most convenient and powerful methods of imparting knowledge in faculty members is through faculty development programs and workshops.

One of the tasks academicians and researchers do on a daily basis is data analysis. They can sift through hundreds of pages a day and find relevant information without much difficulty. Nonetheless, there has been a significant increase in the quantity of data accessible recently. Obtaining more data to conduct better studies is undoubtedly wonderful news for researchers, but it's also a pain in the neck. Fortunately, a significant increase in data analysis methodologies has coincided with the growing trend of data science in recent years. These methods and resources enable researchers to complete laborious tasks that would take days to complete in a matter of minutes! So, if you're also a researcher or just curious about the most important data analysis techniques join the FDP.

This FDP will help academicians and researchers learn how to tackle data analysis and explore various powerful data and research analysis tools. Participants will also learn how to proceed with the research work and compute various statistical measures through meaningful learning about research methodologies. The program is being organized by IQAC, Trinity Institute.

Objective of the Program

- To understand the importance of theory building and conceptual framework in conducting quality research.
- To help management educators seeking to strengthen their understanding of research, research methodology, and research designs.
- To acquaint academicians and research scholars with quantitative research using advanced techniques.
- The program participants will learn how to use and analyze data, which will help them in their research work.
