Lodhi Art District continues to be the cultural hub, inviting people of all creative practices to engage with their city.

After roaming around our first destination we went to our second destination Humayun Tomb. The tomb which was built in 1570, and is mainly known for its structure. It is the first garden tomb in India. Our photographers loved the calm ambiance and beauty of the place, clean, green and serene place. The best part is the access to the main tomb, rich artistic roof work and intricate wall angles make it an architectural marvel.

In a metro packed with vehicles and honks we visited our last destination Sundar Nursery which is a gift from mother nature to us. It is beautifully crafted and maintained, with falling petals adorning the grass every few steps like gems in ornaments.

The photowalk this time helped the photographers to enhance their skills in and know more about street photography, architectural photography and nature photography.

“Photography is the story we fail to put in words.”
